OFFICIAL BIO

Voted by The Huffington Post as:
"America's Most Fearless Woman"

Traciana Graves is the mother of one amazing fourth grader, a passionate tea lover, and a native New Yorker who grew up between France & New York. Prior to becoming a leading strategist for leadership development and inclusion-innovation, Traciana had a career touring the world as a songwriter and background vocalist for artists such as Celine Dion and six-time Grammy award-winning Steel Pulse. She also studied at the Sorbonne, graduated from Georgetown University with a degree in languages and international studies. She later earned a degree in organizational coaching from New York University.

Traciana speaks and consults extensively throughout the country, facilitating corporate training and organizational workshops for Fortune 500 companies, the Women's National Basketball Association (WNBA) and hundreds of higher education institutions. Traciana has over fourteen years' experience lecturing, training, and writing curricula for companies and higher education institutions nationwide.
